1902 LARGE-SIZE NATIONAL BANK NOTES

Fine or Better

These national bank notes were issued by banks with federal charters. The banks would deposit bonds into the US Treasury. They could then issue their own currency valued at up to 90% of the deposited bonds. These bank notes were then backed by the federal government. They were retired during the great depression to consolidate currency into 1 of 3 forms: Federal Reserve notes, US notes and silver certificates. Today, many of these notes have only single digit survival rates and are quite rare.
